SOLDIERS OF FORTURE. It has been correctly said that to write a history of soldiers of fortune would be much like writing a history of the world in brief, with excursions into the first from Private J Green thuman affairs generally in every age 13th, 1915. Private Gregory, who is the said since the fall of man. Religion, laws, culture and philosophy have but followed in his steps. This state of things seemed to have come to a close sixty years ago. At length, good people thought, social order is established on its own base, and the warrior's day has gone by for ever, the warrior's day has gone of the warrior's day has gone of the warrior's day has gone by for ever, the warrior's day has gone of the warrior's day has a warrior as warrior. Castle, last night, in aid of the Toosdale Volunteer Training Corps. The proceedings were opened at 7 c'clock by Mrs J. J. Bell-Irving, of Rokeby Park, and there was a good attendance, including Major J. W. B. Heslop, T.D., Messis H. Walker, R. Wood, Dockrill, W. Ascongh, J. Brown, and other members of the Teesdale Volunteer Training Corps, and a number of soldiers. - Majas J. W. B. Heslop said he wished to thank those present for their kind patronage that night in assisting the venture, and also the proprietors for placing the means of amusement at the osal of the corps. He was also very grassful to Mrs Bell-Irving for coming there that evening to open the proceedings,-Mrs Bell-Irving, who was well received, remarked that it gave her very great pleasure to be amongst them that night to further the interests of the Tecsdalo Volunteer Training Corps. Already about 212 had been collected, which sugured well for the success of the undertaking them in hand. She understood that those who had too young. So long as they had such fine women as Mrs Bell-Irving amongst them they need not be afraid of whatever happened, as she was always willing to render assistance where necessary.—Mr Robert Wood seconded the proposition. Seeing that it was the first Mrs Bell-Irving had spoken in the openair, he thought she had performed that duty exceedingly well. (Applause). The roundabouts were then set in motion, and the rest of the evening was given up to convivial hilarity.
